

RRR NETWORK

The RRR Network of WA

The RRR Network is the peak women's body in Western Australia (WA) advocating for rural, regional, and remote women, and regional liveability. Our purpose is to connect and empower women to build strong communities and improve liveability in rural, regional and remote Western Australia.

Mission: Connect and empower rural, regional, and remote women to lead, influence and build stronger communities through advocacy, collaboration and action.

Vision: Women in rural, regional, and remote WA are central to leading positive change and building thriving, inclusive communities.

Values: Integrity, Diversity and Courage.

What we do.

- Promote the value of regional communities and the vital resources they provide as essential to the long-term social, cultural, economic, and environmental sustainability of WA.
- Foster relationships with and between RRR members, regional industries and communities, corporate, education and research partners, and government and decision makers.
- Champion initiatives that support women-led businesses, social enterprises and community groups to grow, thrive and stay in regional WA.
- Activate mutually beneficial partnerships and collective action to amplify the priorities of RRR women.
- Provide and create pathways for personal and professional development, leadership opportunities, mentorship and education for RRR women.
- Create and promote opportunities to showcase, engage and connect RRR women through collaborative media and events.
- Influence government policy, shape decision making and drive systemic change.
- Gather data, insights and lived experiences of RRR women on what matters to them and their communities.

Our Social Impact

- Today, we have 8 Board Members, 11 Regional Ambassadors, 2 Staff, 300 Members and 16,000 followers.
- 117 women have been on the Board/Reference Group since 1996.
- Since 2019, over 500 women have accessed RRR Network professional development.
- The RRR Network has published several research reports from Sexual Harassment, Leadership and Understanding the Key Issues for RRR women.

A message from our CEO

Next year marks the RRR Network's 30 year anniversary, highlighting our strong reputation and trust as a not for profit in making a positive difference to the lives of Western Australian RRR women and community.

The RRR Network was founded because RRR women sought visibility, connection, and opportunity to participate in key decision making and the workplace.

Today, there are approx. 217,000 women aged from 15-64 living in a WA RRR location and their lived experience remains challenging - from accessing essential services, education and employment.

We are committed to reducing the impact of these issues by working collaboratively with our partners.

Together, we can achieve thriving futures for regional women and their communities.

Kendall Galbraith
Chief Executive Officer

A collaborative approach

The RRR Network is financially supported by the WA State Government and industry partners to operate.

Ongoing, we need strong partners on board to enable our work of connecting and empowering women to lead, influence, and build stronger communities through advocacy, collaboration and action.

Will you support our work?

An investment that makes a difference.

RPS Group estimated annually that the RRR Network generates over $600,000 in non-financial economic and social benefits for members, partners, regional women and the regional WA economy and communities. The largest contributor to these benefits is improved mental health as a result of reduced social isolation.

RPS Group also confirmed that around two-thirds of the RRR Network's projected benefits over a 20-year period will be social in nature, valued at $5.8 million. The remaining $3 million represents economic benefits.

Finally, the present value of the RRR Network's benefits is nearly 2.5 times greater than its present value cost, demonstrating that every dollar invested delivers even greater value back to the WA community.
